

The University of Nebraska-Lincoln's Student Support Services program stands in support of all our TRIO Scholars. We recognize this time of racial injustice and inequality as a call to action. It is time for us to make essential change in how we address our diversity as a program, campus, community and in our battle for humanity.

We stand against racism. We stand for inclusion. We stand with our fellow black students, black staff, and entire black community. We stand in unison, condemning all acts of racism, discrimination, and senseless acts of violence.

We stand together, acknowledging that heartbreak and outrage are not enough to reinvent the status quo. As a nation, our pain and outrage are not enough. Instead, we must unite and speak out. We all have a responsibility to raise our voices and be part of the solution. Together, we must be better, and help each other to become better. Only then will we move forward, with compassion, love, and integrity leading the way.

Student Support Services will continue to offer our TRIO Scholars a safe place to engage in conversations about race, racism, racial healing. We encourage constructive dialogue about injustice and inequality by modeling inclusion within our own program practices and outreach.

Please check the Canvas announcements and social media posts for updates. We will continue to work with our campus colleagues to assist our TRIO Scholars with their concerns. Resources will be added on an ongoing basis to the TRIO Scholars Canvas Module for Race, Racism, and Racial Healing.

Please contact the Student Support Services specialists if you would like to visit. We understand that this is a traumatic time and the impact it can have upon all dimensions of our well-being. Caring for our TRIO scholars is the cornerstone of how we serve them while valuing every TRIO scholar's voice is the foundation for our program's future.
